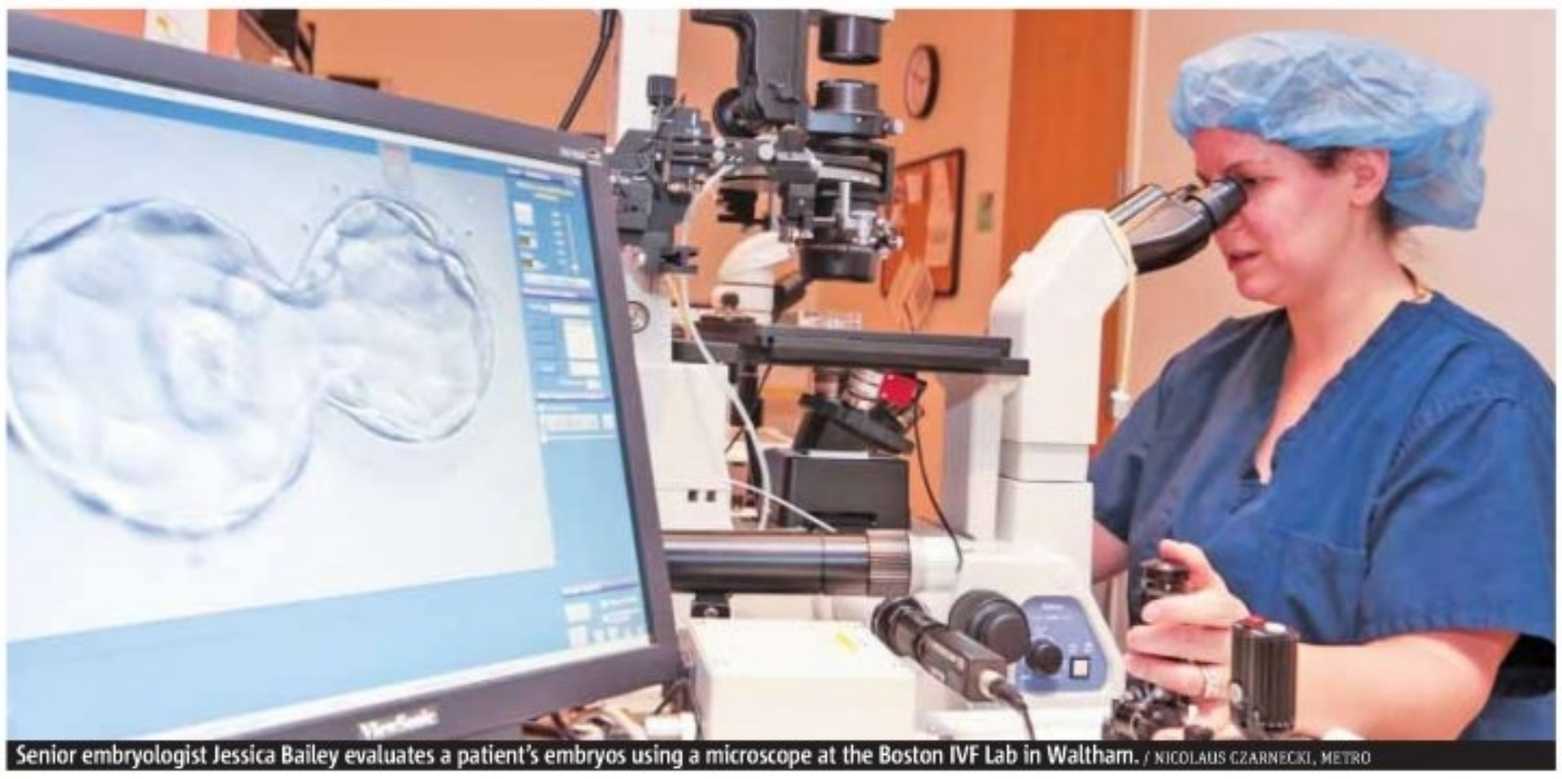
Fertility on Ice to showcase option of egg freezing

Procreation. More and more women are putting their future pregnancies into the frosty hands of science.



Senior embryologist Jessica Bailey evaluates a patient's embryos using a microscope at the Boston IVF Lab in Waltham. / NICOLAUS CZARNECKI, METRO

Egg freezing will become as common as the birth control pill within 10 years, according to fertility specialists at Boston IVF, which is why they are hosting a free Fertility on Ice cocktail hour at Faneuil Hall's Frost Ice Bar.

Women who are torn about whether to step straight into motherhood or put the decision on ice are invited to dress warmly and sip cocktails at Frost Bar on June 19 and hear experts explain the basics of fertility preservation.

Anesthesiologist Pei-Lin Kim opted to freeze her eggs at age 34 to delay family building. Now 39, Kim says though she is still unsure of her childbearing plans, she is relieved that her eggs are "suspended in time."

"I was single when I had my eggs frozen, and because I work [at Boston IVF], I was more aware of the possibility that as I get older, I might have more trouble getting pregnant," said Kim, who is still single. "I'd like to raise a family with a significant other, but for me, the time hasn't come yet. "

Elective egg freezing has gained momentum since the American Society of Reproductive Medicine removed the experimental label from the procedure in 2013.

Doctors estimate that more than 5,000 babies have been born with eggs frozen for fertility preservation.

Without IVF

According to the Reproductive Science Center of New England, the chances of getting pregnant without IVF starting at about age 30 decrease gradually but significantly.

- From age 35, a woman's fertility decline speeds up. By age 40, fertility has fallen by half.
- At age 30, the monthly chance of conception is about 20 percent. And at 40, it's around 5 percent.

Dr. Alison Zimon, a reproductive endocrinologist at Boston IVF points to a noticeable uptick in women opting for vitrification since she joined Boston IVF in 2006.

"It's no longer investigational; it's becoming mainstream," says Zimon. "And it's wonderful because it's an option for women to not feel pressured into having babies if it's not the right time, if the relationship isn't right or if they have too much going on in their careers."

The Reproductive Science Center of New England has also reported a doubling in the number of consultations for egg freezing over the past two years.

"We definitely advise people to think of this before they turn 40. The ideal [time] is under 35. A lot of women do it in the 28-to-35 age bracket," said Zimon, adding that a healthy woman with good-quality eggs is looking at a 50 to 55 percent chance of becoming pregnant.

But there is a catch: Egg freezing isn't cheap.

It typically costs around $5,000 to freeze the eggs, then as much as $7,000 when the time comes to cash in on them.

Despite the empowerment and flexibility egg vitrification offers women, Zimon said she hopes prospective mothers don't put all their eggs in one frozen basket.

"I do feel women should plan childbearing earlier rather than later for so many reasons," she says. "Think of this as a safety net or a backup plan."

Quincy. Assault report near T prompts warning

Quincy Police increased patrols near the North Quincy MBTA station after a woman was allegedly assaulted early Saturday morning.

The woman told police that a man came up behind her, grabbed her at the mouth and waist and told her to be quiet as she walked from the station to Botolph Street around 1:50 a.m.

She was able to fight off the suspect, who fled on foot, police said.

"Be aware of surroundings. [Call] 911 for suspicious activity. This is first case reported," police tweeted. METRO

Charity fraud. Trial for brothers accused of scam expected to begin today

Two brothers charged with trying to scam the Boston Marathon bombing charity The One Fund out of $2 million are set to begin trial today.

The pair, Branden Mattier, 23, and Domunique Grice, 28, are accused of attempting to defraud the organization by making a fake claim under the name of an aunt who has been dead for a decade.

Both have pleaded not guilty to conspiracy to commit larceny, attempt to commit larceny and identity fraud for allegedly claiming to The One Fund that their long-deceased aunt had lost both legs in the April 15, 2013, attack.

The One Fund Boston, a nonprofit that benefits victims of the Boston Marathon bombings, was established by former Boston Mayor Thomas Menino and Massachusetts Gov. Deval Patrick shortly after the deadly terror attack that killed three people and injured 264 others.

Mattier was arrested July 2 after allegedly accepting a fake check from a state trooper. Prosecutors claim that the brothers planned to take a new Mercedes-Benz for a test-drive once they got their hands on the money.

Mattier and Grice, who are out on bail, are due to begin trial this morning at Suffolk Superior Court.

The brothers are not the first accused of trying and squeeze money meant for actual victims from the charity.

Audrea Gause, 27, of New York last month pleaded guilty to collecting a fraudulent $480,000 claim from The One Fund to build a new house. She was sentenced by a Superior Court judge to two-and-a- half to three years in prison. MORGAN ROUSSEAU

Fraud claims

The Massachusetts Attorney General claimed that on May 7, 2013 Mattier and Grice attended a Town Hall meeting held by The One Fund at the Boston Public Library on behalf of their supposedly injured aunt.

- Afterward, Mattier spoke with the media about the importance of their aunt being compensated immediately because the hospital bills were coming in.

Cops: Beware of Sharon bobcat

Police in Sharon put the community on alert this weekend after a bobcat sighting on Saturday and offered tips on how to deal with the potentially dangerous feline.

Police said that bobcats are rarely responsible for killing domestic animals, but occasionally are behind losses of chickens, lambs, small goats, pigs and cats. Bobcats tend to prey on wild animals.

"Once a bobcat causes damage for the first time, it gets easier for the animal to do it again," police warned.

Residents are being asked not to feed wildlife and to prevent buildup of food in bird feeders, keep dogs and cats indoors at night and to feed pets inside. METRO

Street violence. Brother of anti-crime activist fatally shot in Dorchester

The brother of a Boston activist who has worked to end street violence was fatally shot Friday night, apparently while riding a motorcycle on Taft Street in Dorchester.

"I'm in so much pain. My brother has been killed on the streets of Boston, after all my hard work to stop these crimes. We have a problem now," Joao DePina said on Twitter Saturday.

DePina identified his brother, 29-year-old Michael DePina, as the victim.

Police said the shooting happened around 8:43 p.m. The younger DePina was found on the ground with life-threatening injuries and was taken to Boston Medical Center where he was later pronounced dead.

A makeshift memorial was set up in the area over the weekend. Police continue to investigate.

Heated words. Arlington father's gun seized after tiff with school principal

The superintendent of Arlington schools has apologized for a lack of communication after police confiscated a gun from an elementary school student's father.

During an argument last week with a school principal, Robert Goodwin Jr. allegedly flashed his gun permit and said he had access to firearms at home, The Arlington Advocate reported.

Police also suspended Goodwin's gun license and ordered him to stay away from the school. He has not been charged with a crime.

Arlington Superintendent Kathy Bodie said in an email to faculty, staff and parents on Saturday that Goodwin never made any threats.

"I am mindful that communication with all of you could have been handled better. None of you should have had to become aware of this incident through the newspapers," Bodie said. METRO

Bergdahl. Describes his harsh treatment, solitary confinement to officials

U.S. Army Sergeant Bowe Bergdahl suffered harsh treatment at the hands of his Taliban captors including long periods of solitary confinement, according to U.S. military officials who also said the soldier is struggling emotionally and has not yet called his parents.

One U.S. military official told Reuters the 28-year-old is physically well enough to travel back to the United States for treatment. He is suffering from disorders affecting his skin and gums that could be expected after his five-year captivity, the official said, confirming a report in The New York Times.

The newspaper reported on Sunday that Bergdahl told medical officials in Germany that the Taliban kept him in a metal cage in the dark for weeks after he tried to escape.

The soldier is struggling with emotional issues and has not contacted his parents although he is free to do so at any time, the official told Reuters on condition of anonymity.

Another U.S. official said some of the experiences Bergdahl was relating included "harsh treatment" by the Taliban, but that was not surprising. "These are not nice people," the official told Reuters.

U.S. Representative Mike Rogers said on Sunday he thought that at least three of the five former prisoners would return to the battlefield after they leave Qatar.

"I am absolutely convinced of that," Rogers, the Republican chairman of the House of Representatives Intelligence Committee, said on ABC's "This Week." REUTERS

Kerry: Freed Taliban would target U.S. at 'enormous risk'

If the five Taliban inmates released from Guantanamo Bay prison in exchange for a captive American soldier rejoined the fight against the United States, they would do so at great risk, U.S. Secretary of State John Kerry said on Sunday.

"I'm not telling you they don't have some ability at some point to go back and get involved," Kerry said in an interview with CNN's "State of the Union" program. "But they also have the ability to get killed doing that.

"These guys pick a fight with us, in the future or now or at any time, at enormous risk," he said.

Concern that the five former inmates might return to fight has been a factor in controversy in the United States over the deal, under which Army Sergeant Bowe Bergdahl was handed over to U.S. troops in Afghanistan on May 31 after nearly five years in captivity and the five Taliban members were flown from Guantanamo to Qatar. Ambush. Five killed in shooting attack on Las Vegas police at pizza shop

An armed man and woman shouting about a "revolution" opened fire and killed two Las Vegas policemen who were eating lunch in a pizza parlor on Sunday, then fatally shot a civilian in a nearby Walmart store before killing themselves, police said.

The two uniformed patrol officers, later identified as Alyn Beck, 42, and Igor Soldo, 32 — both described as family men — were ambushed without provocation shortly before 11:30 a.m. inside a CiCi's Pizza shop, authorities said.

One of the two officers managed to return gunfire before the suspects fled to an adjacent Walmart, where they killed a bystander inside the front door, then exchanged gunfire with police who pursued them farther into the store. Truck driver in Tracy Morgan crash surrenders to police Collision. The impact caused a chain reaction involving another truck, an SUV and two other cars.

A truck driver who allegedly caused a New Jersey highway collision that critically injured actor and comedian Tracy Morgan and left another comic dead has turned himself in to face a charge of death by auto, state police said Sunday.

Tracy Morgan and two other people traveling with the 45-year-old actor remained in critical condition Sunday at Robert Wood Johnson University Hospital Center, according a spokeswoman.

A fourth passenger on the bus, 62-year-old comedian James McNair, known by his stage name Jimmy Mack, of Peekskill, New York, died at the scene, according to New Jersey State Police.

The comics were returning from a performance in Delaware around 1 a.m. on Saturday when a Walmart truck slammed into the back of their chauffeured Mercedes limo bus near Cranbury Township, flipping it over.

The driver of the truck, Kevin Roper, 35, of Jonesboro, Georgia, turned himself in to face a charge of death by auto, a police spokesman said.

Roper was taken to Middlesex County jail late Saturday night and later posted $50,000 bail, police said.

He could also face four counts of assault by auto.

The limo driver, Tyrone Gale, said on Facebook there was nothing he could do to prevent the crash. "I can only say feeling helpless on the highway was very hard to take," he wrote. "There was nothing I could do but scream at times." REUTERS

Three famous couples split

Casper Smart and Jennifer Lopez reportedly split before Smart's sexting came to light. / ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

This weekend saw a lot of famous couples splitting up. Or at least, admitting that they split up a while ago and hoping they could make their announcements quietly over a beautiful weekend when hardly anybody was online. Most shocking was probably Antonio Banderas and Melanie Griffith, who are divorcing after 18 years of marriage. Griffith filed for divorce, citing irreconcilable differences, and also asked for child and spousal support. On the other side of the Atlantic, Scottish DJ Calvin Harris and singer Rita Ora also announced that they split a few months ago after dating for more than a year. (We admit, we had actually forgotten they were a couple.) Last but not least, sources say that Jennifer Lopez and Casper Smart also split after two-and-a-half years together. Evidently, the split occurred before Smart was reportedly caught sexting with a transsexual bikini model. So technically he wasn't cheating then, right? Smart was actually seen leaving JLo's house in LA on a motorcycle this weekend, however, so we guess they must still be on friendly terms.

2 Bieber believes?

TMZ reports that Justin Bieber was baptized this weekend. The pop star is in need of some cleansing, so that first portion of news makes sense. Over the past year he's come under fire for bad behavior, most recently for racist videos he made when he was 15 years old. But here's where it gets a little weird: Apparently Bieber was concerned about being recognized if he were to receive the sacrament in a church, so the baptism was conducted in a bathtub. A pastor in New York City says he spent a week meeting Bieber for "intense Bible study" last month to prepare the singer for the big day.

WTF, HUGH JACKMAN

We would never call Hugh Jackman dull, but his hosting didn't quite reach Neil Patrick Harris heights. / CBS

Tonys. Last year we got an entire circus, this year we got four minutes of kangaroo hops.

Visit metro.us for a complete list of winners and quotes from the media room.

For the 68th annual Tony Awards, Hugh Jackman didn't want to try to top Neil Patrick Harris' four years of excellence — leading up to last year's impressively acrobatic opening number in celebration of "Pippin." Instead, he and the creative team went for a low-key lead-in, featuring Jackman bouncing through the audience and backstage against overtures from the various musicals that are up for awards this year (an obscure homage to Bobby Van's sequence in 1953's "Small Town Girl").

Part of his bit included soft jokes about being Australian, which he somehow did not exhaust last time he hosted the Tonys in 2003. And then there was one joke that, upon hearing Jackman was hosting the awards show this year, NPH reached out with a congratulatory, "Wow, that's fantastic!" — or, at least, that's what Jackman assumes he meant by "WTF."

We also got a brief interlude in which Jackman joined the "After Midnight" ensemble in a quick tap number. ("Wolverine in tap shoes — you won't see that at ComicCon," he quipped.)

It's disappointing that cutesy jokes and a few song-and-dance asides summed up the hosting gig this year. It's classy, it's just not what we're used to — and it's not a competition, so why fear falling short? Probably because nothing says "go big or go home" like the Tony Awards.

At the very least, Jackman provided a neutral backdrop for the musical numbers woven throughout the show, including "One Day More" from "Les Miserables," "Friend Like Me" from "Aladdin" and Idina Menzel's powerhouse solo of "Always Starting Over" from "If/Then."

Bryan Cranston won Best Performance by a Leading Actor in a Play for his portrayal of Lyndon Johnson in "All The Way" and Audra McDonald won Best Performance by a Leading Actress in a Play for her portrayal of Billie Holiday in "Lady Day at Emerson's Bar and Grill."

What's in store for Alison in this season of 'Pretty Little Liars'?

There's a lot of characters who you haven't seen, and if you have seen them, you haven't seen them with Alison, and now you do.

Alison comes back into Rosewood and causes a tornado to rip through this town and basically drives everyone mad. I think it's really what happens with Alison, that no matter how much she's changed, she goes back into town and ... she's basically wrecked people's lives. People are still going to remember that.

I think a lot of people were happy that she was gone, and hoped that she'd stay gone, and now it's bringing up all kinds of baggage and turmoil.

Interview. "Pretty Little Liars" star Sasha Pieterse reveals what's ahead for her recently revived character.

"Pretty Little Liars" may have endless mysteries to reveal each season, as the long-anonymous A pursues the four main characters, offering them blackmail threats. But one big mystery has finally been solved (spoiler alert!): We learn that former mean girl Alison DiLaurentis, whose apparent murder kicked off the action in the first season, has been alive the whole time. Now that she's back in the open, things are likely to change for everyone, since Alison was no stranger to creating enemies. Sasha Pieterse, who plays Alison, discusses acting in the present tense for a change.

Have you always known that Ali would rejoin the other girls?
I always anticipated it. In the books, Alison had a twin and that's who was alive, and when I found that they weren't going to do the twin theory with Alison, I figured, "OK, something cool's going to happen." And [show creator] Marlene King totally blew away my expectations.

Are you excited to not exist solely in flashback?
I'm so excited. It's been so much fun filming, for many reasons. I mean, flashbacks are great ... but I get to wear current clothes and there's characters like Caleb [Tyler Blackburn] who I've never had a scene with, and now I have, and those were fun things mainly because I'm really reunited with everyone.

Do you ever get weird reactions from fans because of the character you play on the show?
When I started the show and I started to see how big it was getting, I totally thought I was going to get hate mail and super weird reactions, because Alison was such a mean character. But I didn't. It was actually completely the opposite and I thought that was so hilarious. Usually what I get now is, "She's alive!"

Alison's brother Jason is A, right? Can you please confirm?
I think I would get fired.

MAKING ANGER WORK FOR YOU

Kim Schneiderman's book "Step Out of Your Story: Writing Exercises to Reframe and Transform Your Life," is due to be published in the spring. Email Kim your questions at askkim@metro.us.

The Question

Ever since I had a baby a few months ago, my mother keeps sending me baby clothes that I don't like, need or have space for. She constantly texts me with advice. She's always been like this — doing things for me because it meets her needs, not mine. When I express my irritation, my mother says I'm unappreciative and that it's unladylike to be angry, which really infuriates me and makes me feel a bit ashamed. What should I do?

When I was a 20-something living in San Francisco, my Harvard-educated feminist roommate introduced me to "her bible": Dr. Harriet Lerner's "The Dance of Anger." Initially, I couldn't understand why such a privileged, educated young woman could feel so strongly about a book that explores women's anger. But as I began to read, many of Lerner's points and examples resonated with me, only I had been socialized to hide my anger or call it something more acceptable: frustration.

While it's been ages since I read Lerner's book, a few points have always stuck with me: 1) anger is not only a natural emotion; 2) it's also a powerful signal worth heeding; 3) when channeled constructively, it can transform relationships.

Let's start with the first point: Anger is natural, hardwired into our brains to protect ourselves against perceived threats. Like other emotions, it triggers physiological and biological reactions in our bodies, including changes in heart rate, blood pressure and adrenaline. So honor your anger — it's there for a reason.

This leads to my second point: Anger is a signal that our boundaries are being violated.

Your anger is natural, but expressing it properly will help keep the peace. / PURESTOCK

Quoted

"Anger is natural, hardwired into our brains to protect ourselves against perceived threats."

Historically, anger rallied men to protect their land, livelihood and family against intruders (perhaps another reason why men are allowed to express anger, even celebrated for it, while "bossy" women are often called a word that rhymes with witches).

In your case, your mother is the intruder into your personal space, undermining your sense of competency. Aside from being a doting grandmother, she clearly has a hard time determining where she ends and you begin.

Metro does not endorse the opinions of the author.

Kim's tips

How to cope

Because she doesn't show respect for your own needs and boundaries, your anger is urging you to push back. But how you push back can make a difference in how she responds and, more importantly, how you feel about yourself. Lashing out at her is only going to make things worse. Yet suppressing your anger isn't the answer either, especially if this has been an ongoing dynamic. Here are my suggestions:

1 Write an uncensored letter to her that expresses every horrible and annoying thing she has ever done to you. But do not send this letter; it's intended to help you release anger from your body so that it doesn't fester or leak out in undesirable ways. Give yourself permission to fully feel your feelings without judging them.

2 Show appreciation while setting clear boundaries. Set up a time (when you're not in the middle of an argument) to meet. Begin by saying that you appreciate her desire to be helpful and involved with her grandchild. Then, explain that you need some room, free of her feedback, to develop your own parenting style and confidence as a new mother. You might appeal to her own sensibilities: "Mom, you must understand how fun it is to pick out your children's clothes. I, too, would like to do that for my own daughter."

3 Accept that while you can assert your own needs, you can't control how others respond. If your mother still refuses to respect your wishes, you may need to let go and approach her with a sense of humor. At least you've made your case. And if she sends you stuff you don't need, donate it to charity. At least her goodwill won't have been completely wasted.

Ticks. Tips to stay safe from the bloodthirsty buggers while outdoors

You don't have to traipse through deep wooded areas to pick up a tick this summer. One can latch onto you in any city park.

"[They lurk] anywhere there's grassy vegetation, but especially where the grass is taller," says Dr. Roberto Posada, an infectious disease specialist at Mount Sinai Hospital in New York City.

The good news is that most tick bites don't make us sick. There are many different types of them, but the one Northeasterners fear most is the deer tick, which is responsible for causing Lyme disease.

As bad as Lyme is, it isn't as bad as Rocky Mountain Spotted Fever, another tick-borne illness common to the Southeast that can be fatal if not treated quickly. Even in this area, though, there are other illnesses — such as babesiosis and anaplasmosis — that come from ticks.

The first thing to do if you suspect a bite, Posada advises, is to wash the area well with soap and water to minimize the risk of bacterial infection. A rash is one indication of a bite. The deer tick produces a bull's-eye rash, while Rocky Mountain Spotted Fever produces small red dots around the feet and hands. Fever, aches and headaches are also symptoms that a tick got you.

Ticks are tiny and hard to spot until they're fat and bloated with blood. (There's not much about ticks that isn't disgusting, really.) Removing them should be done carefully with tweezers.

"They attach by a nozzle, which buries into the skin," says Posada. "Make sure you grab the nozzle and pull straight out — don't pull side to side. You want to get all of the tick out." LINDA CLARKE

Hate to be the bearer of bad news, but this is a great way to get a tick. / IMAGE SOURCE

Advice

Prevention and treatment

Tick bite infections can be treated with antibiotics. Still, prevention is better, says Posada: "No one wants to wear long sleeves and pants in summer, but clothing forms a barrier. [Ticks] can't attach themselves like they can with bare skin. Also, take a shower right after you've been hiking, and do a body search."

Bringing the magic of film into city schools

Arts education. Since 2002, the Tribeca Film Institute has been nurturing the next generation of filmmakers.

Anyone who has been following the state of arts education in schools today knows that one thing is true: Funding for creative programs in schools is constantly under threat.

Since 2002, the Tribeca Film Institute has been working with schools across the country to develop the next generation of young filmmakers. Founded by actor Robert De Niro, Craig Hatkoff and De Niro's longtime producing partner Jane Rosenthal, the Institute runs programs across the country and abroad. "The Film Institute was sort of an unexpected turn," said Rosenthal recently just before receiving the Montblanc de la Culture Arts Patronage Award for her work with the Institute. "To see kids come out of it and use 'Tribeca' as a noun or an adjective. … They'll say, 'Oh, I did Tribeca,' or 'Are you Tribeca-ing this year.' And it's just — how did that happen?" she asked with a laugh. "It's just an unexpected joy for me to get to have that in my life and to be passionate about that."

While the average filmgoer probably doesn't know Rosenthal's name, they've almost certainly seen the movies she's worked on, which include "Analyze This," "Meet the Parents" and "About a Boy." Along the way she has also worked with the Institute and other filmmakers to give young people a creative outlet. Last Tuesday, she was honored by the Montblanc Cultural Foundation and De Niro himself for her longtime advocacy of the arts.

As Lutz Bethge of the foundation puts it, Rosenthal had a significant impact on the arts and the state of the creative industry in Lower Manhattan, particularly after September 11. "I think she did something extraordinary for the film industry," says Bethge, "because she gave young directors an opportunity by giving this area new hope, bringing in young people and giving them a new direction, allowing them to find their own way."

Since the Institute began 12 years ago, Rosenthal has become a passionate advocate of encouraging creativity in schools. "Art programs have been slashed, that's the first thing to go," she notes. "And after that it's sports programs. Every kid needs a break where you can express yourself in different ways. It's not just English and algebra that you need functional knowledge in."

The star producer also sees bigger and better things for the Institute in the years to come. "I would like the program to be in every one of New York City's public schools. I would love to see it grow nationally and internationally. … So I think I have a bit of fund-raising to do in that case," she says.

Movie magic

The stars of tomorrow

Since its founding, the Tribeca Film Institute has created several programs to grow creative talent. About 25,000 students annually attend the Institute's programs, which include:

- Tribeca Teaches: An in-school and after-school program that uses film as a tool in the classroom.
- Summer Arts Institute: A tuition-free summer-intensive program that allows students to major in artistic disciplines including dance, film, theater and photography.
- Tribeca Youth Screening Series: A film series that helps expose New York City students to independent films.

People who know they stress out in environments with tight deadlines should gravitate toward fields in which they can give themselves the time and space they need, says Paul Tieger, author of "Do What You Are: Discover the Perfect Career for You Through the Secrets of Personality Type." / GETTY IMAGES/ WAVEBREAK MEDIA

Happiness at work starts with finding the right fit

Know yourself.

Finding the perfect job starts with assessing your personality.

On the surface, the advice that young people should select careers that fit their personalities seems obvious, but a quick look at the stats reveals that it's anything but.

A survey released last year by Gallup revealed that nearly two-thirds of employees from more than 180 countries reported that they were "not engaged" at work and that a mere 13 percent of employees currently feel passionate about their work.

None of the figures are surprising to Paul Tieger. For more than 30 years, helping people find fulfilling career paths has fascinated Tieger and has driven his own career and work. Along with Barbara Barron and his millennial-aged daughter Kelly Tieger, the author has just released the fifth edition of "Do What You Are: Discover the Perfect Career for You Through the Secrets of Personality Type," which is geared toward the current generation of professionals.

"When you are doing something that is not about who you are, that's a prescription for burnout," Tieger says.

"We believe through lots of experience that the most important thing is to pick a job and career that matches your personality," he continues. "Your values, interests and skills are likely to change over time, but your personality will not."

To that end, the book provides exercises and examples to help guide readers toward their perfect careers. Both Paul and Kelly Tieger say that it's particularly important for younger professionals — the so-called millennial generation — to understand their personalities and unique needs when deciding what to do in their professional lives. Here are some of their tips for finding the best job for you:

See if you can make a lateral move

If you are certain that your current department or environment isn't working for you, see if you can make a lateral move within your organization, advises Kelly Tieger. Applying for a different position may not make a difference in your salary, but it might greatly enhance your quality of life.

Start early

If possible, the Tiegers say that you should examine fields that suit your personality while you're still in college. "Most people are asked to pick a college major when they're 19," says Paul Tieger. "But most people don't have a clue at that age [what they want to do]. ... Someone who is philosophical and artsy [won't be happy working on] Wall Street."

Know yourself

Career changers who want to explore their personality types and profiles can take a quiz at personalitytype.com/dowhatyouare. And don't fret too much about your results, the Tiegers say.

"Just because you're creative doesn't mean you'll never make money," says Kelly Tieger. It just means you'll have to get creative about choosing the right path for you.

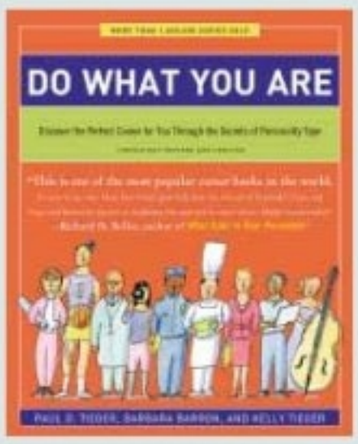
Advice

Ignore the 'trendy jobs'

"It's a difficult economy, so it can be hard to buck the trends," notes Kelly Tieger. But while considering the current so-called trendy jobs, it's also important to be realistic. "Think of the typical artistic type," says Paul Tieger. "Those people really need to be true to themselves. The key is understanding what your strengths are."

He notes that people who know that they would stress out in environments with tight deadlines, for example, should gravitate toward fields in which they'll have the time and space they need to do their jobs.



"There's just a different feeling here. Genuine warmth, caring, and relationships with each other that make working here unique." D-Day over Cruise

Re: 'Cruise can take the heat' (Metro, June 6-8) June 6 marked the 70th Anniversary of the Allied invasion to liberate Europe of Nazi control. But Metro commemorates this important date in history with a front page of Tom Cruise's new movie and again on page 5. It's apparent that you DO understand the role history has played in his films but not about what it played keeping U.S., France and others from having to practice that special salute Hitler was fond of using.

NO SCAPEGOAT TO BE FOUND FOR 2014 SOX

So, this after-party is kind of a dud, huh?

The 2013 Red Sox season was that kickass ripper no one ever wanted to end, but now — in the dreaded year after — it seems as though we'll be taking nothing but Tylenol and Pedialyte to get us through the summer.

The odds weren't on Boston's side from the beginning of the season, of course, as no team has won back-to-back World Series titles since the Yankees from 1998-2000. And even the most die-hard of Sox fans would have to admit the 2013 Red Sox were not nearly as talented as those Yanks.

Heading into last night's nationally televised game in Detroit, the Sox once again held the longest losing streak in baseball (tied at five games with the Mets). Just two weeks ago, it was the same deal. Few teams in MLB could keep up with the Sox in terms of being on the wrong side of the slate.

The mounting losses are not likely the product of weak effort — which is why it's probably unfair for this team to be booed later this week at Fenway. But there absolutely has to be some subconscious relaxation period going on here for many players who led the Sox to glory last year.

Part of the problem for fans this season is that there's not really any one person, in particular, to blame for the horrid record. It's hard to complain too much about the big name guys — David Ortiz, Dustin Pedroia, Jon Lester, John Lackey — as they're all having adequate seasons. There are even some young players who have stepped up of late — Brock Holt, Xander Bogaerts and Rubby De La Rosa.

A.J. Pierzynski is surely "boo-able" in some fans' eyes, but the facts say he's fourth among AL catchers in RBIs, is on the radar for an All-Star selection and is basically doing what most thought he would do before the season began — irritate some, but hit .275 and drive in runs. Stephen Drew, he with the .091 batting average, is an easy target for holding out so long. But his agent, Scott Boras, deserves the chunk of that blame. And it's highly unlikely the boo birds will have the opportunity to chastise him when he's in the field at Fenway later this week, because he won't be making any mistakes at short anytime soon.

Dustin Pedroia, right, and the Red Sox haven't been able to get out of their own way over the past few weeks.

"There absolutely has to be some subconscious relaxation period going on here for many players who led the Sox to glory last year."

That's why all of the blame for the team's poor record should be heaped on Daniel Nava. Really, Daniel? A grand total of three RBIs in 86 at-bats this season? Cesar Crespo could hit that in his sleep and … oh, forget it. Harping on poor Daniel is just too damn mean. What should we really expect of him?

There's just really no one to point the finger at … and that's frustrating. So maybe we'll just have to sit back, complain mildly about this 2014 team as a whole, but never get too carried away. They're simply not as good as the 2013 group because the 2013 group was a team that set out to right wrongs. Subconsciously, at the start of this season, there were no more wrongs to right.

"That'd be like me at 6-foot-2 playing basketball with a kid in a wheelchair."

NHL. Rangers, in 0-2 hole, hoping that return home does them good in Game 3

Teams taking a 2-0 lead in the Stanley Cup Final are 43-5 all time. The Kings stand in that position now as they head to Madison Square Garden, with Game 3 of the series coming Monday (8 p.m., NBCSN).

But the Rangers need only look to their head coach to know all about squandering a two-game lead in the Cup Final. In 2011, Alain Vigneault's Canucks did just that with a 2-0 series lead over the Boston Bruins. Boston won Games 3 and 4 and eventually the series.

"You realize what's at stake. [The] series isn't over yet," Rangers defenseman Ryan McDonagh said after the Game 2 loss in Los Angeles Saturday night. "They've got a 2-0 lead, but we're going home, we're excited, we got to use our crowd here. They just won two at home so we've got to start with Game 3 and have a good approach there, and keep staying with it, keep believing and keep going forward."

The Rangers squandered three two-goal leads in Game 2. They've now led for 50:03 in the series, while the Kings have not led once in regulation but have still picked up two overtime victories.

"We could be up 2-0 right now, but they're up 2-0," New York right wing Martin St. Louis said. "It hurts a little bit right now, but tomorrow you wake up and get back to work."

Monday's game will be the first Stanley Cup Final contest at MSG since June 14, 1994.

Sox in Baltimore to take on O's

The Red Sox will conclude their nine-game road trip with three games in Baltimore starting Monday (7 p.m., NESN).

Jake Peavy (1-3, 4.72 ERA) will get the ball for Boston in the series opener, while the Orioles will counter with Bud Norris (4-5, 4.41 ERA). The O's are 31-30 on the year but sit in second place in the AL East. They trail Toronto by 5 1/2 games. METRO

Do you have Diabetes or Heart Disease?

Purpose: Researchers at Brigham & Women's Hospital (BWH) are conducting a 12-week research project to study whether eating small amounts of walnuts every day may improve risk factors for heart disease.

Eligibility: Men and women, 30+ years old, with known diabetes or heart disease, and no allergies to nuts.

Study details: If selected, you may receive walnuts (1 oz per day) or remain on your usual diet for 12 weeks. You will come to BWH for 2 visits (1st and 12th week) lasting up to 2 hours each. During each visit, we will a) check the health of your blood vessels by placing two small rubber probes on your fingertips, b) draw a small amount of blood, and c) monitor your heartbeat for about 5-10 minutes.

Payment: We will pay for your parking at BWH during the 2 research visits and you will receive $200 when you complete the 2 visits.

Contact: If interested, please contact our Study Coordinator at 617-525-7794 or email: ccircnet@partners.org

Help us with diabetes insulin research
Type 2 Diabetes

A 15 month clinical research study is evaluating if a new investigational basal insulin dosed once daily can provide safe and effective blood sugar control compared to a marketed basal insulin dosed once daily in people with type 2 diabetes.

Qualified participants will receive all study-related care and study medication at no cost and may be compensated for travel.

You may qualify if you:

- ✓ Are 18 years or older
- ✓ Have had a diagnosis of type 2 diabetes for at least 6 months
- ✓ Are receiving treatment with any basal insulin with or without oral antidiabetic drugs for at least 6 months
- ✓ Are at high risk for developing hypoglycaemia (i.e. recent hypoglycaemic episode, severe hypoglycaemic episode, hypoglycaemic unawareness, moderate chronic renal failure or insulin usage for more than 5 years)
- ✓ Have an HbA1c level of not more than 9.5%
- ✓ Have a body mass index (BMI) of less than 45 kg/m^2

DO YOU HAVE HIGH CHOLESTEROL?

A research study is currently being conducted to evaluate an investigational medication for individuals with high cholesterol.

YOU MAYBE ELIGIBLE IF:

- You are at least 18 years old
- Have a history of hyperlipidemia or mixed dyslipidemia
- You are being treated with atorvastatin, simvastatin or rosuvastatin
- You have a high risk of incurring a Cardiovascular event

Qualified participants will receive study related medication and study related assessments.

Compensation for time and travel will be provided.

Do you suffer from migraine headaches?

If so, you may qualify to participate in a research study being conducted locally.

People who suffer with migraine headaches may have headaches with intense throbbing in one area of the head that is sometimes accompanied by nausea, vomiting, and extreme sensitivity to light and sound. If you suffer more than 8 headaches a month, you could have a condition called Episodic Migraine

If you have been suffering with headaches that fit this description for at least the last 3 months and are at least 18–65 years of age, you may qualify for a research study being conducted at this office.

Study-related office visits, laboratory work and medication are at no cost.
